Is vaginal discharge normal?

Mostly, any kind of vaginal discharge is pretty standard and consistent. The only things that may change are the amount coming out of the vagina (for example, when you're ovulating, breastfeeding, sexually aroused, etc.) and the colour, depending on what stage of your menstrual cycle you're in. This is normal.

What causes irregular discharge?

Discover more Women's Health content from articles, podcasts, to videos. Irregular discharge has many causes, such as a sexually transmitted infection (STI), tissue irritation, or a change in the amount and type of naturally occurring bacteria in your vagina, called the microbiome.

Is yellow discharge a sign of a health condition?

Yellow-ish discharge may not indicate a health condition as it can naturally turn this color when exposed to air. But darker yellow or green discharge -- especially when it's thick, chunky, or accompanied by an unpleasant smell -- is a sign to see a healthcare professional.
